Throughout history, certain styles have transcended time, becoming iconic symbols of their respective periods. From the flappers of the roaring twenties to the punks of the seventies, each generation has its own unique fashion signature.

The Roaring Twenties: Flappers and the Birth of Modern Fashion

The 1920s marked a turning point in fashion history. The war had just ended, and women were ready to shed their corsets and embrace a new era of freedom and independence. Flappers bobbed their hair, shortened their skirts, and danced the Charleston, defying societal norms and embracing a more carefree lifestyle.

The 1960s was a decade of social upheaval and cultural change. Fashion reflected this spirit of rebellion and experimentation. The mod movement, with its clean lines and geometric shapes, embodied the optimism of the early sixties. Hippies, on the other hand, rejected the materialism of the era, embracing a more bohemian and colorful style. The miniskirt, a symbol of female liberation, became a popular item during this time.

The 1990s also marked the birth of streetwear, with brands like Supreme and Stüssy gaining popularity among young people.
